60th Anniversary of the Berlin Airlift

It was sixty years ago that 2-year old Baerbel Simon heard a roaring noise, saw the shadows and then the large white birds flying low near her home in Berlin. Although Russian tanks had surrounded Berlin and prevented the delivery of supplies, the governments of Great Britain, France, and the United States were determined to extend the Marshall Plan to alleviate the deprivation of the people of Berlin by organizing and carrying out a flyover to drop over 100,000 tons of supplies. "Operation Vittles" flew in 13,000 tons of food daily from over 200,000 flights over an 11 month period.

From a child's point of view it was a miracle. Food came from the sky. Gum was a curious object that came without instructions. Chocolate drifted down in small parachutes from the "Candy Bomber," Gail S. Halvorson.

From the new allies' point of view it was a necessity to prevent the Soviet Union from taking over control of all of Berlin, in contradiction of the agreement to share control of post war Germany.

From the historians' point of view it was the first act of aggression in the Cold War.

On Thursday, July 30, Baerbel Simon told the Rotary Club of Des Plaines and invited guests the story of this remarkable period in history from both the child's and the adult's point of view. She shared her appreciation for the sacrifice that so many Air Force Pilots made to keep her and her family alive and well during this bleak time immediately following World War II. She and representatives of the American Citizens of German Descent also brought a plaque they had commissioned to honor the memory of American pilots who died during the airlift.

Ms. Simon is a member of the Berlin Chapter of the Cold War Museum.

Werner Juretzko sent me excellent photos of the events of the July 30th meeting. Try as I might, I could not export them to this blog. I will email them to the DP Rotary list directly.
